

At present, it's a little early for fond reflections or glowing predictions. At present, we are fulfilling the last of our obligations, listing them out loud to each other in lieu of conversation, foregoing sleep and regular meals. (As I've gone through these last torturous weeks, I have done so with more than a little sentiment. The stress of college life bears an intensity that is never duplicated.)

Now we've discovered- no one is quite sure why- that there is to be no official yearbook for the class of 1994. And now we're throwing one together at a week's notice to recover the year in Pratt's history that almost wasn't.

Under the circumstances it's indeed difficult to assess what has been most valuable or memorable about the last four years. I recollect certain personal anecdotes regarding my instructors and classmates, and I recall having been told once that we benefit above all from having been introduced to one another.

There is inestimable joy in being surrounded by those for whom you feel genuine respect and admiration, whose words and work continually challenge and inspire. There is no use in predicting their future, as their future is equally inestimable.

First Impressions

rectings fellow Pratt folk. My name is Sven O'Reilly. Please allow me to be the LAST one to welcome you to Pratt. Yes, young freshman and freshly transplanted transfer students, I, your dear friend Sven, want to be the last person to ask you these three things:

- 1) "What is your name?"
- 2) "So, where are you from?"
- 3) "By the way, what's your major?"

Now that that's over, let me just warn you, it's not over. Come Thanksgiving and Winter Break every single conversation will start with six evil words: "So, how do you like school?"

Yeah, I know it's the polite thing to say. It makes it look like you actually care whether or not somebody likes school. In this society that we laughingly call civilized, polite conversation is actually considered a good thing instead of the insanity that it truly is. Why, in many third world countries like Belgium, if someone is forced to hear a phrase like, "So, what's your major?" more than three times in any 48 hour period, they're free to go on a wild murder spree, splaying everyone that uttered the phrase, until they find and kill the first person who used it.

...ler's talk about something peppy and uplifting like the threat of war in the Middle East. This whole Iraq/Kuwait thing has all of Earth's human eyes focused on it and every strong, healthy, red-blooded young American male afraid to check his mail.

Yep, you guessed it, I'm talking about THE DRAFT.

How in the name of Darwin, do they expect the human race to evolve any further if they round up all the men with good, healthy genes and send 'em off to get killed? I'm not suggesting we send the terminally ill to guard the Saudi Arabian border. That's even more ludicrous than bombing Yorba Linda.

Draft or no draft, war or no war, the irreversible damage has already been done. First Panama, now Iraq... we'll never get George Bush out of the White House! It's obvious our president is making a big production about this just to make himself look good. He sent thousands of troops and arms to Saudi Arabia. Why? We've got Rambo, we've got Chuck Norris' Delta Force. Better yet, send in the "A" Team. They'll go in and capture Saddam Hussein without killing anyone!

EXCERPT FROM AN OCTOBER 1990 INTER-VIEW WITH DR. ILCHMAN by Suzy Soffler

Dr. Warren Ilchman came to Pratt from SUNY Albany, where he served as Executive Vice President for Academic Affairs for three years. He has received a number of awards and honors and has authored twelve books.

Q: What do you think are the most urgent issues that you have to deal with? What are your three top priorities?

Well, the first is to raise funds to improve the quality of life on campus. The renovation of Higgins Hall, to get more and better studio space, to have an aesthetically more beautiful campus. I think when you're in the creative process, where you live is very important, so that's very important to me.

A second need is to create a life on the campus that the commuting students and the residential students will find engaging, because of the security issue. So I think we have to have a really vital and vibrant life on campus, in addition to the studio work that attracts people to our school.

And I guess the third big issue is the finance issue. And the financial issue is that we have an accumulated debt that we have to get paid off. The question of how we do that without affecting the quality of life—how we do that while at the same time improving the quality of life—is a really important one, from my point of view.

Shaping a Vision

EXCERPT FROM AN OCTOBER 1992 INTERVIEW WITH DR. ILCHMAN by Patrik Henry Bass

Q: What changes have been made to assure that your vision of Pratt is correct and not blurry?

A: Well, we have had to make some fundamental changes. They have all been for the better. We have improved admissions. They are up by 10% this year (17% for freshman). Admissions are up in all categories; new students and transfer students, national and international students, which is better for diversity at Pratt. We've also tried to organize and make more effective our Annual Fund. We've done better with it this year than last year. We've established a Commission on Liberal Arts to establish joint degrees and to assist our present students, We've had a major effort to improve advertising in published materials describing Pratt. A major effort is (underway) to establish a logo. We're trying to update the appearance of Pratt to the outside world.

KAREN FINLEY: PAINT IT GOLD by Eric Brown

Karen Finley's reading on April 8th in Memorial Hall was spontaneous and dynamic. In the monologue, she mentioned the annoying characteristics of theater majors, but Karen herself was the opposite. It seemed that in person the feelings and experiences she explores through her work tend to surface comfortably, almost casually, or not at all. There was no shock, no controversy, no performing. Simply good common sense. It is certainly a result of Karen's candid and confrontational method of dealing with her subjects that allows her a down-to-earth approach when not on stage.

EXCERPTS FROM AN INTERVIEW WITH KAREN FINLEY by Eric Brown

"I can't stand the stuff in Art Schools, where what's taught is the notion of the martyr or suffering, or this idea that when you are in school, it is going to be decided for you that it is virtually impossible for you to make a living. When I went to school, the idea of making a living never came up. You never thought of it, you did it because if you didn't you'd go crazy... I think that it is a part of capitalism or Art in America, we don't really look at artists as professionals. They are looked at as being liars or cheats, or like crazy people or perverts.

"I'm really for artists as social responsibility, artists as activists... for inventing your own structure to get your work in, trying to create your own profession... that's how it was with me, and getting into performance... the thing to do is start your own scene. I think the generation that is younger than me needs to start their own thing, be it in Brooklyn or Chicago, and not rely on joining what's there in SoHo or mainstream... I don't think that New York is the place for emerging artists ... I think the emphasis is going to be on going to smaller cities, I just hope that the press follows, because the press right now is New York."

New Words in the Oxford English Dictionary in 1990

arcade game: a (mechanical or electronic) game of a type originally popularized in amusement arcades birth parent: a natural (as opposed to an adopted) parent skanking: a style of West Indian dancing to reggae music, in which the body bends forward at the waist and the knees are raised and the hands claw the air in time to the beat; dancing in this style gender gap: the difference in (especially political) attitudes between men and women

- ON SEPTEMBER 26, Dr. Barbara Ehrenreich, author, journalist, and social critic presented "Lurching Toward Babylon: A radical view of America in the '90's" sharing her feelings toward our incompetent government and its involvement in Iraq and finally questioning how the Pratt community will deal with the "warrior society." As the audience exited, they signed a proposal for a Peace Organization on campus.
- TUESDAY NIGHT DINNERS: Father Perry, Senior Chaplain and Nadia Merzliakow, Director of International Student Affairs, combined forces to create an evening of intellectual and gustatorial stimulation for members of the Pratt community.
- THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES allocated $2 million for extensive repairs on the support beams of the 16-year-old Activities Resource Center.

- APPROVED BY Vice President of Finances Tom Ford, Independence Savings Bank installed an Automatic Teller Machine across from the main security booth giving 24 hour cash access.
- A SERIES OF PAINTINGS by Pratt alumnus Paul Warren, a Fine Arts major who did the paintings as a "graduation present" for the Chapel in 1982, were installed in the hallway of the Chapel in the Fall.
- GEORGE LOWRY, Vice President and Chief Academic Officer of Pratt, retired after eleven years of overseeing students and bridging the gap between the faculty and administration.
- ON NOVEMBER I, the Student Life Division of Student Services held an "All-Nighter" for the finale to the Extended-Orientation (EX-OR) program as an outreach method to stem attrition of Freshman students. Over 200 of the 319 Freshmen attended.
- ON NOVEMBER 27TH, a series of talks organized by NYPIRG began on the topic of Design and the Environment. The four speakers were Gerald Lynas, Randy Martin, Solly Angel, and Mohammad Karamouz.
- THE POETS 4, a unique jazz poetry group, performed at the Pratt House on October 26 for a very special closing performance of the 9th student group show.
- THE NEWLY RENOVATED Esther Lloyd Jones Residence Hall opened on February 26 after extensive remodeling and renovation, turning previous double and triple-occupancy rooms into singles and studio spaces.

Changing Times

GRINDING GEARS by Jean Shin

resident Warren Ilchman announced during an open forum held in Memorial Hall October 22nd that the Board of Trustees will consider closing the School of Engineering at the next Board Meeting. Many engineering students, faculty and administration present at the meeting responded with hostility toward this consideration. "Instead of having a broken arm and fixing it, the administration wants to amputate it," protested one engineering student. Concerned members of the School of Engineering requested a thirty day delay in the Board of Trustees decision. The Board agreed to meet December 11 to vote on the future of the engineering school.

Meanwhile students, faculty and administration in the School of Engineering were busy formulating a plan of action to present to the Board before their pressing deadline. They contacted the 5,400 engineering alumni for suggestions and financial support. They gained more support from high school students of Bronx Science, Stuyvesant High, and Brooklyn Tech at the Open House.

Mohammad Karamouz, acting Dean of Engineering was informed the Friday before the official announcement. Although he had recognized the need to address the problem of declining enrollment in the school, the news of closing the school came as a complete surprise to him as well as to the rest of the students and faculty.

President Ilchman expressed the necessity to choose and make a decision that regards not only the future of the Engineering School but the Institute as a whole. The Commissioners on Engineering presented a report and recommendation to the Board which concluded that an investment of $3-5 million within 3-5 years is needed to rebuild the program. The Board decided that Pratt could not afford to keep the engineering school open at the expense of the other schools.

Pratt's engineering school was one of the oldest in the country and has a reputation for graduating a large number of minority students.

FRANCES HALSBAND: DEAN OF THE SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE Excerpts from an interview by Robert Segal

"I think there is a regrettable tendency to identify 'good' schools, which are allegedly the Ivy League schools, and then to assume that the good students are going there and that other students are going somewhere else. It is exactly that misconception that we have to fight at Pratt. There are a lot of very good students and very good faculty here who are tired of the mystique of the Ivy League schools and who feel that a school with less pretension about its reputation would be a more interesting and a more real place.

"Part of that reinvigoration process is that Pratt needs to reestablish its ties with the civic and professional and design communities in New York and beyond, and part of it is recreating collaborative relationships between the teachers within the school and within the Institute.

"I believe that the most important thing about architecture is that we make buildings, and we must have a theory to do that. But the test of a theory is that we create architecture.

"We have a unique opportunity at Pratt. Architecture is not only about formal design: total art and total craft. The other factors are what Warren Ilchman calls 'the making of things,' which takes with it all the contextual concerns—technology, materials, social, historical, and cultural issues—which go into making things. Some schools have turned away from that but Pratt has a connection to the making of things because of its art schools and its art tradition.

"Also, because of PICCED, Pratt has a connection to the solving of real-life urban problems. Out of that combination of looking at art and looking at reality, Pratt's will be the next generation of architects."

Speaking in Terms of Change Excerpts from a Final Interview With Mary Buckley by Tim Lane

frer 37 years of teaching foundation classes, presently in light, color and design at Pract Institute, Mary Buckley is retiring at the end of the Spring term '92.

"Pratt divides into two times, before I came, and after-and it's not that I make the difference. We had a new dean, and the new dean said that we've got to do something about foundation. At that time we got rid of the stylized, rigid ideas about working and brought in fresh air that had to do with being young artists, and enthusiastic artists-intellectually, spiritually, and emotionally. We brought in these fantastic people. We turned things upside-down and began the modern foundation. We brought modern thoughts and more modern ideas to foundation. This was in the late 1950's-I had only been at Pratt a year or so, enough to know that it was solid but starved. It was very, very exciting. From then on, we kept changing and changing.

"I think [art school] has to do with helping people in our culture understand that being an artist is part of being an individual. We need individuals. We need to have artists, it doesn't matter what style. We have the right to be artists. I think that is where people are confused about what being an artist means. What your ideas are, what your views are, what you believe in, what is your passion? Life is what is important. We don't cherish the life part as much ... We're afraid of risk-taking. We have to be willing to be less protective and take our risks and have our problems.

"I have said to my students, 'You don't have to wash dishes, you can do other kinds of things. You can use your intelligence.' I know there are people who believe that if you are a painter, you shouldn't do anything else. I feel very fortunate that I have been a painter, and I have exhibited all my life. I sell my paintings. I have not what you would call a 'big name,' but my idea of success is my idea of success. I love working much better perhaps than socializing because of the richness of it—the rewards...."

CAROLE ROSENTHAL Excerpted from an interview by Liza Williams

Professor Carole Rosenthal of the English Department is the female equivalent of the "Renaissance Man:" she is a popular teacher, a scholar, a creative writer, a fine artist, a social scientist, and a mover and shaker in the School of Liberal Arts and Sciences. Since 1967, when she first came to Pratt as a part-timer, she has been involved in many areas of campus life, from earning the Distinguished Professor title to heading various groups dedicated to bringing notable visitors in to speak or perform. She has taught courses as diverse as "Contemporary Ideas in Literature" and "Modern Women Writers." Women's issues have always been in the forefront of her interest, and she is the faculty advisor for Women's History Month.

Q: What do you like most about Pratt?

A: The students! And also the fact that the faculty is really involved and interested in the students. The fact that they think consciously in both visual and verbal images gives rise to creative inquiry and solutions. They don't have the cant of typical liberal arts students, so they bring fresh takes to literary works. I find it incredibly stimulating. Pratt students are greedy to understand human experience, hungry for it.

"Another thing I like about the students is that they tend to identify themselves as 'outsiders,'mavericks. At its worst that breeds apathy born of cynicism, but at its best it makes them marvelous critics of their own experience, and puts them in the position to be open to the reality they're experiencing."

LIGHT FOR HEALING By Jean Shin

any student's gathered outside South Hall to show their support for victims of assault during the Silent Candle Light Vigil on February 26 at 9 PM. The vigil was organized by Sophomore Ellen Dolinar, who chose South Hall because it was the site of the most recently publicized assault incident on February 13th. However, she emphasizes that the vigil was for victims of all assaults.

"I do not want to target this one particular incident. It's the only one that's been most publicized but there are a lot of assaults that occur which we don't know about on this campus," says Dolinar. "There are all kinds of assaults: physical, mental, verbal; it happens to both male and female. This vigil is for everyone."

Although many students gathered in silence, a few vocalized their reasons for attending.

"It's important that the school body get behind the victims of heinous crimes like this," says Tony May.

"I think it's awful what happened, it could have happened to any one of us. I support her and that's why I'm here." said Shannon Keller.

"I came because people are getting hurt all the time and it affects the community we have. People are less trustworthy," says Dan Roth. "The best thing you can give anybody who's hurt is your time and attention. It's time for me to give the victims my attention here."

Father Perry also expressed his reactions. "In the kind of assault that happened here, everything is assaulted. Her and our ability to move around and live carefree was diminished. Assault violates the integrity of the person. No one has the right to violate the freedom of another person by word, thought or threat.

"What's good about a vigil like this is that people became selfless enough to stand out in the cold simply to say, 'I'm opposed to assault and I want to be part of the healing process. I want to affirm the freedom and life possible on this campus.' People must unite to oppose something that is evil. I'm impressed by the goodness of people here."

BROOKLYN By N. Rain Noe

Brooklyn—the outerborough. The part of New York City known to the rest of the world only through the lens of Spike's camera or a few select music videos. Almost always overshadowed (but not always upstaged) by its spoiled older sister, Manhattan, Brooklyn carries connotations of the underground and claims responsibility for the way John Travolta used to talk before his kids and pets started pipin' up.

Feared by people who live over Central Park, cherished by anyone who's lived in a brownstone, Brooklyn claims huge amounts of historical longevity and cultural contrast. If New York City is a melting pot, Brooklyn is the ladle, formed from the metal and mettle of generations of Jews, Italians, Latinos, African-Americans, Koreans, Chinese, Jamaicans, etc.

Think of Brooklyn as the more accessible, less expensive borough of New York. Free of the rural connotations of Queens and devoid of the isolation of Staten Island, Brooklyn is like the Bronx and Manhattan, with less calories and more flavor. You can get an apartment in Brooklyn three times the size of what the rest of the city'll give you, and for half the cost. You can get the variety of the city, with a little less traffic. And the fact that we have more breathin' room and semblance of plant life out here is the reason why that first book, A Tree Grows in Manhattan, never quite went over.

Hamburger Helpers-Sarah Cross ordered two hamburgers from a Wendy's restaurant drive-in-window in Augusta, GA. She later found that the bag the Wendy's clerk gave her did not contain the hamburgers, but it did contain $1,000 in cash. The money was exchanged for the hamburgers. The restaurant manager explained that he had been preparing a bank deposit and put the cash in a bag. When he turned away, the window clerk, thinking it was an order, picked it up and handed it to Cross.

Cultural Perceptions

MYTH INTO REALITY By Patrik Henry Bass

ere in the hallowed halls of Pratt, Korean students are a sizable population, but are their voices heard?

The problem of non-communication between Pratt students and some Koreans, extends from private rooms, to the classroom, the lunch room, and the waiting room. As much as some Korean students do not want to admit, outwardly they do not see a problem. Ironically enough, it's impossible for some Americans to admit that at the heart of the problem might be impatience, intolerance and ignorance.

Talking to several members of the Korean Students Association at Pratt, I was able to get to the heart of a lot of myths and turn them into realities.

MYTH: Koreans have a negative attitude about the United States.

REALITY: Sangman Han, President of the

KSAP explained, "In the past, Korea had a very serious Civil War. (It appeared) that the U.S. saved us and in our subconscious, the U.S. (had) the best image in our mind. So I think it's because it's our ideal and we are eager to come, study and get a job in America."

MYTH: Like Jewish and Italian immigrants before them, Koreans have gravitated to retailing in urban areas, where their willingness to work long hours and use low-paid family labor compensates for their limited English and capital.

REALITY: "Koreans are different from their predecessors and from many other recent immigrants in that they are mostly well-educated. Some 75% of Korean entrepreneurs have a college degree; many of them sold their homes in Korea to invest in their American ventures. For them, running a store is both a first step on the American ladder and often, a downward slide from higher-status professional jobs back home."

SHARING CULTURES By Jean Shin

On October 8th the Prattler sponsored a discussion entitled, "Korean Students on Campus" where a group of students and Pratt personnel were invited to share their thoughts on problems facing Pratt's Korean student population.

Han said, "KSAP has been here for ten years since 1982. At that time, there were less than ten people in the Association now there are over 300 members. Our biggest problem is the language problem. It's very hard to express our mind and thinking. Also there's a cultural difference ... We have two goals right now. First, to unite as Koreans ... By coming together we have power ... Second, we plan to do a "Korean Night" to show our culture, history, music, and serve our food to everyone ... The first thing is, could you take away the prejudice from Koreans so you can come to know us, our culture?"

Over 400 enthusiastic students, faculty, and administration of the Pratt Community attended Korean night on December 4 to share and experience the richness of Korean culture. Han concluded by recalling what President Ilchman had said in his opening address that night, "Tonight was very important. We are no longer students from Korea at Pratt but Pratt students."

SURITUMETY IN ARY Excerpt from an interview with Father Perm By Kelly Rider and Bill Place

ichael Perty was ordained a Catholic priest in May of 1971. Two years later, in October of 1973, he was offered the position of Chaplain at Pratt. He has been here ever since.

"There are very few people—and certainly very few priests—who are exposed to as many people who have or will have an impact on the world. There's reason to believe that everybody who's a student here will somehow have a significant role to play in the world. We don't teach things that don't make a difference.

"I was telling this story the other day. Louise Nevelson was here and we gave her an honorary degree a few years ago. As it happened, walking out in the academic procession she was holding on to my arm...looked at all the graduates and said, 'You know, Father Perry, I would love to grow old in the world that these young people help re-create.' I know what she means. I don't think there's another place like it in the world. I really think that the impact we have on the world is out of proportion to where we are, who we are, to what we do. It's one of the reasons I like being here so much, it helps me to be a better priest.

"I've maintained for a long, long time that there's an essential relationship between the priest and the artist. Without the relationship the world would have no hope because the priest takes the material reality and makes it spiritual, and the artist takes the spiritual reality and makes it material. That's what it's all about. The rest is all filler."

JOE SMITH Excerpted from an interview by Carrie Hamilton

Professor Joseph Smith teaches junior and senior drawing and painting at Pratt.

"I never finished graduate school at Pratt. I was there for my BFA from '54-58 There was certainly no such thing as a three hour painting class. That's one of the stupidest inventions that they've come up with, because that's an hour of setting up, an hour of cleaning up, and an hour of smoking. The competition was really fierce, and there was a lot more work ...and you worked partly out of fear.... Back then you thought a C was a good grade. Now people think a B is a birthright, an A is what you get if you come to class.

"I didn't think there was any difference between exhibiting and [illustrating] books, I just wanted to try and be an artist. I got a gallery... I got into illustration by a fluke ... I needed money, I had two babies and a mortgage... full-time salary at Pratt throughout the sixties was only $6,000 a year ... I was the Newsweek courtroom artist at the Watergate hearings, and when I was asked initially if I knew how to do courtroom drawings, I said, 'Of course!' Meanwhile, in my head I was saying 'I'll learn, I'll teach myself down there.' I think it all boils down to the fact that if you can draw, you can do anything you want to."

CYRILLA MOZENTER Excerpted from an interview By Carrie Hamilton

Professor Cyrilla Mozenter, who teaches sophomore drawing and is Assistant Chair of Graduate Fine Arts Department, attended Pratt from '65-72, studying on both the graduate and undergraduate levels.

On the subject of maintaining a life as an artist (in particular, a woman artist) Cyrilla is matter of fact. "You can't quite have a regular life plus get to make art. It doesn't really work that way...An art career takes enormous energy, you can't really pursue it in a laid back way. Just making phone calls, setting up appointments, writing letters, applying for grants, labeling slides, etc., takes nearly as much time as making the work itself. So it's hard to also have a great social life ... There are, of course, many women artists who have families ...but without another source of income, it's very, very difficult I want to make it clear that I don't regret having 'given up' things in order to pursue my work. I'm not ambivalent. After all, when doing my work, I'm the most me I can be."

Liberated by his billions from conventional politics, the blunt -spoken Texan Ross Perot played by his own rules, gaining 19 million votes for presidency.

After almost marrying Kiefer Sutherland, and following reports of relationships with Jason Patric and Daniel Day-Lewis, Julia Roberts married Lyle Lovett on June 27.

History & Identity

ouis Reyes Rivera—Higher Education pportunity Program Counselor/Advisor to the Agenda—"While that sense of a developing perspective is both necessary and appropriate, there's something else we should take care not to forget. Since its inception as Negro History Week and now as African History Month, the purposes for setting aside the month-long moment have been the same: to inform both our own and the larger world community of the facts regarding the historical contributions people of African descent have made in world civilization; to commemorate the struggles engaged against the inhumanity we have suffered; to celebrate the achievements we've made despite what we've suffered; and to reflect upon where we've been in order to best assess where we're all headed.

Tchaka Cooke—Student—"It's important to see that its not only Martin Luther King and Malcolm X, there were people before them that made King and Malcolm X possible and also people that were made possible by King and Malcolm X. They're continuing the legacy and struggle."

Syr Ivan K. Bennett—Student—"The Agenda (black students organization) enables black students at Pratt to have more of a word as to what goes on—whether it be financial aid which affects the majority of black students or just in terms of self awareness."

Dereck Grant—Student—"Pratt is the type of school where the people are so afraid of offending anyone that they play it safe.
They almost end up being ignorant in their own way... To change things we need to look at the truth. Today's imagery of black people is the common thief or prostitute. No, we have to look at the truth like black scholars and people of education—that's something we all need to think about."

Dwight Johnson—President of the Black Alumni Association, Professor of Design Procedures and Light, Color and Design—"One of the biggest problems facing African-Americans is that we do not have an understanding of how we came here as African... and how we got on campus. Essentially, African-Americans don't know our history, and I mean our history from Africa. I get the sense that the students at Pratt are very frustrated. What we need is a combination of education from home as well as the public education system."

Sandra Benjamin—Assistant to Foundation—"You have to have a certain kind of inner strength so you can fight barriers.

Color is the foremost barrier; being female is another... I think the new generation is more aware but they're disconnected from the experience. It's hard for a person of this generation to imagine not being able to drink or go to the bathroom because you are a certain color—all those things are taken for granted. When you have to fight for something, it becomes more valuable."

Rashida Abu-Bakr—Assistant Director of HEOP—"There is a very deliberate miseducation of black people within the confines of the United States ... I think the resistance to (correct the very small imperfections, mistakes and omissions) has unfortunately and appallingly come from the very areas that it should be coming from; the greatest resistance has been academia and the arts. Those two areas have constantly reinforced the negative, even the inaccurate, misrepresentations, distortions, misappropriation of place and dates in order to support the most negative system. A system that is based on a class of privilege—based on something as insignificant as one's color or gender. As though it is preordained that you yourself created your color and your gender."

Richard Perry—Chairperson of the English Department—"My own experience as an African-American man is one that is complex, contradictory. Depending on the day and my state of mind, I will feel a part of the Pratt community, and other times an outsider. Sometimes it's a perceived attitude, sometimes it's walking into a room where nobody looks like me, looking through a new textbook and finding that few or any African-Americans or people of color are represented. It's feeling like you're on top of the world, solid, smart, strong, knowing that I am who I am."

3 INTERVIEW WITH DR. THOMAS SCH E By Jean Shin

n August 16th, Dr. Thomas F. Schutte was appointed as the eleventh President of Pratt Institute. Dr. Schutte has been active in higher education for more than 30 years and brings a wealth of experience and leadership to his presidency. He joins Pratt after serving as President of Rhode Island School of Design since 1983.

Q:What vision do you have of Pratt?

A:The first vision of Pratt is that its quality and pristine reputation be recognized throughout the country. Secondly, that the curriculum, the educational programs at Pratt, be the very strongest possible. Thirdly, that we have the very best students at Pratt, from an educational, academic, and creative standpoint. Hopefully, that would generate and develop the strongest resources for Pratt in fund-raisers, grants and annual funds. We need to put the financial structure at Pratt at balance and make sure we are solid financially. Then, I want to do whatever I can do to further develop the > physicality of our campus—the landscaping and restoration of buildings.

Q:What is on the top of your agenda right now?

A:First I want to learn and understand the culture of Pratt-get my arms around Pratt and know more about what Pratt is about:

the linkages it has with external forces, what departments are doing, what Pratt's reputation is, are what the issues are right now. Secondly, I want to make sure our budget is in the best possible management for this year. Third, I want to come to terms with fundraising. Fourth is to get stability for Pratt.

Q: What do you see as the difference between Pratt and RISD?

A: RISD and Pratt are both wonderful schools with their own personalities and characteristics. Pratt is a much more urban environment, much more dynamic. The opportunities of the urban environment are strong. Secondly, the Pratt faculty is a very professional faculty. A larger portion are part-time and much more actively engaged in their professions and that's one of the advantages. As far as the campus, Pratt's is larger; twenty-five acres, and more comprehensive.

QUEER FACULTY By Andrew Williams

The sense that "they" are somehow breaking rules and had better be careful is the way that many gay, lesbian, or bisexual faculty and staff model their behavior at Pratt. While many are known to other staff and even students, few are willing to challenge perceived risks in agreeing to even an anonymous interview. To some, there is a fear of being perceived as "recruiting" students. To others, it is a belief that homo- or bisexuality is a personal matter, one that is never appropriate in conversation. To others, there is the perceived risk to their careers if it were "discovered" that they were queer.

These risks, some actual and some only imagined, come from socialization in a culture and an academic environment that has little understanding of its own heterosexism. As a concept, heterosexism is the belief that heterosexuality is inherently superior to any other sexual orientation. If you're not straight, be quiet about it. Any mention of your sexuality is "flaunting." In the end, queers often feel as if they carry a terrible secret, able to share it with only those who sympathize.

Being an openly gay faculty member has other risks. As with other minorities beginning to achieve equality, gay, lesbian and bisexual persons in the workplace are often seen as representatives for their "people," a situation that causes tremendous pressure toward perfection.

William Chickering ("Chick"), Dean of Libraries, expressed his views on being a gay faculty member at Pratt. "It took so much energy to hide. When I came to Pratt, I realized that it was somewhat more liberal than many (colleges), but I didn't know how this was going to play out. It turns out that in my professional career I've never had to hide that I was gay."

Raising Questions

DEFINITELY NOT KANSAS By N. Rain Noe

Statistically speaking, the biggest danger to Pratt students (in terms of number of reported crimes) is larceny or burglary. Either you or a student you know has had something stolen from them. You know how it is, you left your bag in the PI shop and sprinted back there an hour later to search for it among the garbage-strewn tables, or maybe you forgot to chain your stereo to the table in your dorm room and now you're listening to your AM clock radio for music, or maybe you left your ArtBin full of gold bullion in the studio and now some light-fingered freak is doing drawings with your hard-earned charcoal sticks.

Another thing to keep in mind is that most criminals cannot be reasoned with. The first time I was mugged, I gave my assailant a hug and told him I thought he was a special person; then he pistol-whipped me into oblivion. A criminal like, say, a mugger, will size you up with a single glance and place you into one of the two categories that fill his testicle-sized brain: Muggable or Immuggable. Criminals are everything we try not to be: they judge you by your looks; they're sexist; they're completely irrational.

You can complain that fear of crime is oppressive and detrimental to your quality of life, and that you're not going to let it affect your daily routine, but at some point you have to be realistic. Take that cowboy hat off before you go to the Alibi. Don't be walking down Myrtle wearing headphones and playing a Game-Boy (I've seen this. I've seen this.). Don't argue with a mugger; it's about as productive as arguing with the Bursar's Office (perhaps these two jobs are interchangeable.).

HOUSE BROKEN By Amy O'Neill, Brian Ripel and Jean Shin

On October 5th, 1993, President Thomas Schutte, Vice President of Student Affairs Kathleen Rice, and Assistant Director of Residential Life Chris Kasik announced to Caroline Ladd Pratt House members at their house meeting that, effective at the end of the 93/94 academic year, the Program could no longer exist as it had for the past ten years. The administration stated that most likely students would continue to live in the Pratt House with the President, but in decreased numbers and in a different capacity than during the span of the program. President Schutte cited spatial and programmatic needs as the reasons for the change.

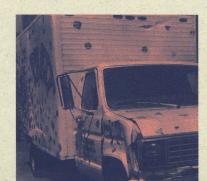

The Project began in 1983 when Father Perry, concerned over the state of disrepair that the house had fallen into, and with the assistance of Judy Nylen, proposed and implemented "The Pratt House Experience in Restoration Living." Dr. Warren Ilchman was the first President of Pratt to live in the house with the students. Despite a controversy over Dr. Ilchman's destruction of a wall to create a "vast dining space," President and students lived in peace.

Attempts at compromise with President

Schutte were rejected, leaving project members without a site to continue the project. Faculty Housing was finally agreed upon as the new home for the project. Two of the vacant faculty houses that were in unlivable condition and a third habitable house were to be the new focus of the Pratt House Project. But red tape complicated the issue, again leaving project members without a home.

Project members requested of Dr. Schutte an extended stay in the Caroline Ladd Pratt House until the issue of relocation could be resolved. Dr. Schutte agreed to a proposal which was similar to one presented shortly after the October 5th meeting. Students gave up the second floor living quarters and converted the lounge into a living space.

The process left Resident Director Amy O'Neill questioning the Institute's attitude toward students: "Students are being undermined by the Institute in which we are supposed to be the footholders and definers. There is very little institutional confidence in the students."

Site and Sound

NOT IN MY BACKYARD By Patrik Henry Bass

s the 92/93 school year approached its end, Steuben Hall became the focus in a debate as to what to do with the existing facility, which is owned by Pratt Institute and presently standing as used space for offices and storage.

Pratt Institute Center for Community and Environmental Development proposed to use Steuben as the site for the Benjamin Banneker Academy for Community Development, which has the goal of "embracing the best principles of educational reform and a need to harness the energies of students for the positive social transformation of urban communities."

As the 92/93 school year began, Banneker's location had moved from Steuben to North Hall, bringing with it a rent check (from the Board of Education of New York City) for $200,000, and the controversy continued. Those who opposed Banneker were afraid that they would be painted as villains. How could anyone deny school children the opportunity to learn in an environment that would give the students individual attention for advancement? Worse, there was the issue of race. The school is mostly African American and Latino, with a largely African-American staff. Would opposing the school mean opposing progress?

Or would not opposing the school mean that people who pay for tuition have no rights in the running of the school? Would Banneker be the proverbial straw that would break Pratt's relationship with its increasingly frustrated students?

With the end of the 93/94 year came an announcement from President Schutte: "Pratt's contract with the New York City Board of Education expires in June '94, at which time Banneker will relocate to a facility off campus. However, Pratt and Banneker faculty will continue to work together on developing a strong and effective curriculum for the Academy."

HOT WALRUS Excerpted from an interview By Susan Lee

Walrus. Hot Walrus started in response to a dearth of music activity at Pratt. The members include: Brian Ripel (guitar), Ethan Andrews (guitar and vocals), Adam Osgood (harmonica and percussion), Ed Desantis (drums) and Justin Cooper (bass). They began by playing at the coffee houses, Java Jams, the Alibi and Cafe Right Bank in Williamsburg.

Q:Do you feel there are enough performance activities on campus?

ADAM: You have to look for it. It's not going to jump at you.

BRIAN: In the past two years I've seen performing arts sort of revitalized ETHAN: There may appear to be a large number of things going on but it does happen to be a fewer number of people. BRIAN: In a lot of ways it's fine ... you need people to do the performance but you also need the audience. If the school plays an active role as an audience, that's probably just as valid as performing ... and I think that's a big step that's been taken—that all of a sudden there is more of an audience for other types of art. I think art school should be a place for all different kinds of art and especially performance. Didn't Talking Heads come out of RISD? They became such an influential aspect of the music world whereas they were visual artists. Q:Who has influenced each of you? ALL: Julio Iglesias.

ETHAN: You could say the band Phish has influenced us ...

ADAM: I started in H.S. listening to mostly Chicago blues ... I had the opportunity to learn off old blues musicians, Phil Wiggens was my mentor ... it basically changed my perspective on music.

BRIAN: It's definitely an eclectic blend. I think each person in the band brought their own ideas ... I listen to a lot of jazz and Ed's strictly pop ... I'm kidding, Ed.

Lasting Impressions

M CONE By N. Rain Noe

oon, very soon, the rest of the seniors and myself will step outside of the Pratt fence and no longer be paying customers. There will be that night in May when we'll go to sleep as art students and wake up the next morning as degree-holding civilians. We will have entered, MTV notwithstanding, "The Real World."

College is the last regimented form of education that many of us will experience. From here on in, anything contributing to my own personal edification will come from my position in society as a prestigious Industrial Designer or as a lowly waiter in some SoHo cafe or, more than likely, somewhere between the two. Those of you that are grad-school bound, I envy you a little.

Sometimes I feel that despite everything we've seen, read, and assimilated about life after college, there are still some surprises in store for us. I can't help but wonder what it feels like to follow a nine-to-five: I mean the total experience of the whole punch-in, work, lunch hour, work, punch-out business. Daily, I remind myself that I'll never become one of those sullen souls in suits that you see around Wall Street at noon, eating their lunch outside while sitting under some pigeon-shit-encrusted statue that has a plaque imprinted with some meaningless business- or warfare-related quote and wondering how the hell they ended up where they are. This, after all, is why we're at Pratt studying all things creative and not at Rutgers blowing 100 grand on a degree in Accounting ... right?

When I look back at Pratt through the t.v. screen of memory, after I wipe the screen clear of the magic-marker scribbles that say "The Bursar Sucks" and "Where the Hell is My Schedule" and "The Administration Here Has All the Inventiveness and Spontaneity of a Hollywood Squares Celebrity Quip," I'll see some good things. Not just the corny "Class of '96" style standard-issue college memories (which invariably involve alcohol and a really interesting puke story), but the education. Not only academic education: I mean the countless number of things that we've learned here about people, relationships, togetherness, solitude....

I think about the myriad late-night hours I spent in the studio, burning stuff (midnight oil, the candle at both ends, a couple Camels, and my brain). They used to lock the studio up at IT PM, and we used to break in to work late. When the guards came around we'd be hiding under the desks like the Katzenjammer kids, trying not to exhale (similar to Bill Clinton, but with us it was just tobacco). You stay up late with a couple people for a few thousand nights in a row and a tight bond begins to form, something that's going to last for a long time after we graduate and rise to positions of prestige within the Transit Authority.

Late-night coffee, contemplating terrorism, laughing at stupid shit. ... I guess the academics of art and design sort of apply to the social aspects here, because in more ways than one, our education here has hopefully enabled us to see things that we couldn't see before, as well as providing us with a plethora of stories that grow funnier and more intense over time, stories that our children will one day dread hearing yet again, stories that fit somewhere into our brains and personalities and indirectly influence the course of our lives.

Can't help being a little nostalgic; chances are I won't be able to swing by Caroline's every other Thursday to crack a few jokes, or bang out some literature for the New York Times on a come-and-go basis. Never again will I have a parking spot for $99 a year—Manhattan parking spots run around $400 a month. That's more than my rent, which means that in society's sick scheme of things, a Toyota Celica is worth more than I am. Well, whattaya gonna do?

My only regret about Pratt is that I didn't spend a little more time relaxing in the empty Chapel or sitting in the courtyard with my back to the fountain (blissfully oblivious that some knucklehead has been throwin' butts in there). It's such a cliche, but it's true that your college years go by very fast. You make a couple friends, pick up a few new techniques, raise a little hell, wear a couple pencils down, and bang, you're wearing that square hat that you last saw flying through the air at your high school graduation. Time flies, and so does that damn hat.

C-va on the G-train.

AUL LAMANTIA AND LORI

DeLeo were appointed new Director and Assistant Director of Student Activities, replacing Linda Vega and Neil Hayes, respectively. Cries of disapproval resulted in numerous student resignations and firings.

THE U.S. News AND WORLD REPORTS 1994 Guide to America's Best Colleges ranked Pratt 11th out of 42 of the Northeast's top colleges.

- A CIRCLE OF HOPE was only one sign of Pratt's recognition of World AIDS Day.
 Artwork was hidden to commemorate a Day Without Art on December 1.
- "DESIGNING PRATT" WAS an informal inauguration for President Schutte on December 6. A symposium addressed "What is leadership at an Art and Design and Architecture School" at Higgins Hall and a Holiday Extravaganza celebrated Pratt's faculty, students, staff and trustees in the A.R.C.
- PRATT SOLD sto MILLION in endowment investments to repay bank debt. President Schutte eyes 1994/95 as last deficit year for Pratt.
- FIFTEEN MEMBERS OF THE AGENDA met with seventy-five BBACD students on the anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Banneker.
- PRATT'S ARCHITECTURE STUDENT Senate initiates PASS News to provide forum and information on and for the School of Architecture.

- ALPHA PI OMEGA SORORITY recognized as a colony of the Inter-Greek Council.
- ANOTHER PRATT PROJECT PROJECT, a student group formed out of the larger Pratt Project for environmental and social responsibility, funded ten student-initiated projects during the Spring '94 semester. The group received $6,000 of a $35,000 grant which was granted to Pratt by the Henry Luce Foundation. Another Pratt Project Student Group was formed through the encouragement of Professor Stephan Klein, Luce Grant Coordinator at Pratt, and Professor Randy Martin. The ten projects that received funding were as follows: Interdisciplinary Design Project, Pratt House Project, Square One, PASS Positions and Awards, Klatch, International Art Exhibition, In-Process Publication, Universal Design Research Lab, The Student Center and The Publication and Paperwork Project.
- ON JANUARY 27, the Pratt community officially said farewell to Pedro Vialet, Supervisor of Equipment and Facilities at the A.R.C.
- THE FATHER AND Doctor Faustus Lights the Lights were two signs of resurgence in Pratt Performing Arts led by Wennie Huang.
- "OUTCAST" JOEL PETER WITKIN spoke at the Caroline Ladd Pratt House, only to be upstaged by an open-mic Java Jam.
- OUR YOUNG BLACK MEN ARE DYING and Nobody Seems to Care, "one of the most important plays in America," related the hardships faced by many black males.

- CONCERN OVER THE FATE of part-time faculty resulted in a small group of graduate students creating a mock crime scene in protest in front of Main Building.
- "PERFORMANCE ARTIST and Political Comedienne" Reno performed her vigorous act in Higgins Hall on a stormy winter evening during Women's History Month.
- THE AGENDA HOSTED its second annual "Pan-African Collective Student Exhibit" in the Main Building's Across Gallery.
- RANDY MARTIN, cultural anthropologist in the Department of Social Sciences and Management, was selected as Institute Professor for 1994-95.
- PRATT CHANGES ITS LOGO to Futura Extrabold ... followed by a variety of punctuation!
- AGAINST AN ENTRY FIELD of over eleven thousand, the Prattler (editor Jean Shin and art director/managaging edito Jon Simonsen) won fifteen top awards at the 1994 Columbia Scholastic Press Association's Gold Circle Awards. The Prattler won a total of nine awards the previous year. The Prattler's fifteen awards is one of the highest number received by any publication in the country.
- CHRISTO AND JEANE-CLAUDE CHRISTO speak at commencement for the class of '94. Both receive honorary Doctor of Fine Arts degrees.
